14 Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs)

A waste regulation on POP's waste introduced by EA (Environment Agency) making changes to the disposal process of waste containing POPs.

Pops can be found in a number of different items, most commonly used in flame retardants.

Some examples of these are:

- sofas
- sofa beds
- armchairs
- recliner chairs (electrical or mechanical)
- kitchen and dining room chairs
- garden furniture
- stools and foot stools
- office chairs that are fire resistant to domestic standards
- futons
- bean bags, floor and sofa cushions

Any other upholstered items that can reasonably be described as a form of seating used by households, and to which relevant fire regulations apply this might include child car seats, highchairs, and benches. This includes any part made of or containing leather, synthetic leather, other fabric, or foam.

The environment agency has instructed that all unassessed domestic seating & soft furnishing waste must only be disposed of via incineration, no other recycling route is permitted. The EA (Environment Agency) state that all soft furnishings should be assumed PoPs unless it can be proven otherwise by way of test results with a certified certificate.
